Kit bud taken a slight cold, and so she did not have to go to school. Although glad enough to stay at home she could think of nothing in particular to do, and after breakfast she wandered tround the house almlessly for a while. She finally strayed into her father's study. No one was there. On the table an array of open mouths, and gives out her father had left it. Kit glanced ever the neatly written pages, but did not attempt to read them. Then she went into the sitting-room; but her mother was not there, for she had gone out also. WHAT I KNOW ABOUT SPELLING.

In many schools two, three or four spelling classes form the closing exercises in the afterneon programme.— Spelling, like geography and grammar, s considered a separate study. So the faithful dominia stands up daily before column after column of words, short or long, according to the capacity or age of said mouths. No wonder his head uches, and he fluds it necessary to go up the Rhine every summer for his health. Speiling in this way always seemed to me a very tedious and mechanical performance, and I long ago (forty years) gave it up in disgust. Well, what prepared to spell any word in the lesson. Insist on the same readmess it geography, grammar, history, physiolorate; and finally one of them said quite gy, philosophy, chemistry, or whatever plainly: "She promised she'd hem as the study may be. You will be surprised at the blumbers by bright pupils not trained on this plan. See if some of them don't say imperative, oxagen, put two t's in Cincinnati, and insert a d in John Hancock of blessed memory,-Spelling thus goes side by side with reading and studying. The pupil is trained to look closely. He knows the meaning of what he pronounces; for if ie is in philosophy, for instance, it is presumed that he is able to understand the text. According to the old plan, youngsters of eight with good memolies are often discovered, lost like Livingston, in the Ethlopia of the back part of the spelling book.
